Reading this page

The CFPB says complaint data is not a statistical sample, and bigger companies receive more complaints because they have more customers. This page therefore compares rates (timely response and relief), not raw counts.

Recommendations: Where Operations Should Focus First

CFPB Consumer Complaint Database · 4,991 complaints, 95% received 24–29 August 2026 · All products and companies

Key findings

1. Volume: credit reporting is 92% of complaints. "Incorrect information on your report" alone is 58%, and 1,807 complaints (36%) say the information belongs to someone else.
2. SLA: 98.6% of complaints were answered on time. The three credit bureaus were 100% on time, but smaller companies (8% of complaints) caused 67 of the 68 late responses.
3. Hot spots: debt collection has 28 late responses (80.8% on time), and complaints about threatened legal action were late 14 times out of 26.
4. Peers: the six large banks answered 98.6% on time, in line with the overall rate. Credit bureaus gave relief in 44.6% of closed complaints.

Recommendations

1. Fix the biggest driver at its source: improve identity matching between lenders and credit bureaus so information is not reported on the wrong person.
2. Protect the SLA where it fails: track debt collection and student loan complaints daily, and send complaints about threatened legal action to a specialist team with a 10-day internal target.
3. Use the relief rate as an early warning: review each month the issues where companies most often had to fix something.
4. Re-run this dashboard on 2–3 years of data, filtered to the bank peer group, to confirm the trends.

Caveats

- The CFPB data is not a statistical sample of all customer experiences.
- Complaint volume reflects company size and market share, so rates are compared instead of counts.
- This extract mostly covers 24–29 August 2026, so it shows a snapshot, not a long-term trend.
- The CFPB changed its product and issue categories in April 2017; only recent data is used.
- 32 complaints were still in progress when the data was exported.
